ROMAN CATHOLICISM IN NEWFOUNDLAND

The first roots of Roman Catholicism in Newfoundland had been planted by the French. In the 17th century (from 1655) they had a settlement called Placentia or Plaisance. It was actually the capital which even saw a visit by the bishop of Quebec. However, these roots did not take to permanency due to circumstance. By terms of the Treaty of Utrecht (1713) the French were obligated to leave Newfoundland.

The real Catholic roots of continuity for this country took place in 1784. It was then that the parish of St. John the Baptist was founded with its first resident priest Fr. James Louis O'Donel. Vatican sent, Fr. O'Donel's mission was to establish the Roman Catholic Church in Newfoundland. This was successfully accomplished.

Below are more than 1, 500 marriages of Catholics performed in the beginning years. Mainly Irish, these new families provided strength and guaranteed continuity to this special nation.

How This Index Works By Section

GROOM. This index is alphabetized by the groom's surname. From there given names follow in their proper order. In the case of a sequence, such as twelve John Murphy's, these will be followed by the alphabetal order of brides. For instance, there are three men named Patrick Kennedy below. The first is espoused to Mary Glenn, the second to a Mary Ryan and the last married also to a Mary Ryan.

Just like in our own times names were often abbreviated or given short forms. In some of the entries below John will be written 'Jno' and William 'Wm'. There is an abbreviated names table below. The groom's middle names were not included in the records during this epoch.

In some cases a person was married only under a given name with no surname. In a few cases the given names were left out of the records.

Lastly, because of ink blotches and the ravages of time, some names are partly or almost totally blacked out; some names are almost completely faded. On a number of these entries the author makes an assertion of the name using square brackets [ ].

BRIDE. The bride's name is written, like the groom's, on how it appears in the records, even with the same spelling mistakes. In the 18th and 19th centuries names were written as they sounded. For instance, Sarah may appear in a marriage act as 'Serah' or 'Seragh'. The same goes for family names. Tremblay may appear as 'Tremblais' or 'Tramblaye'. If a bride married as a widow then her maiden name is first given followed by 'alias' or former spouses surname.

GROOM'S PARENTS/BRIDE'S PARENTS.These names were not explicitly given in early Newfoundland registers and are designated 'NG' in the appropriate columns. However, a few are noted in the witnesses part of the records. There will also be found, because of space limitations, notes on two invalid marriages: Christopher Grenville & Hannah Noonan as well as that of Oliver Brenna & Mary Mullone.

DATE. Dates appear in this index by the modern English-Canadian rendering of month-day-year (mm/dd/yy). In some cases only the month of a wedding is included and not the day. Also, some marriage acts have no date and thus an assertion by the author is noted in square brackets [ ] to facilitate the finding of a record.

PLACE. The place of marriage in this index is usually St. John's indexed as 'Cathedral, St. John's'. However, not all marriages were performed in the city as some marriages were done by priests making missionary visits to outlying places. There is the case of such visits to Bonavista, for one, and the Labrador marriages of 1818. These are noted in this category and are singled out in the provided links above.
